"Our Christopher"
Defending against some unseen foe.

Letter From Our Chairman

Welcome to this latest edition of WORDS, the newsletter of the Worster-Drought Syndrome Support Group. Before I tell you about our next family day, I would like to thank everyone who rallied round during August and September last year when I had a bout of illness. It is very pleasing to know there are people you can rely on in times of need and a little bit like this group, there to lend a hand when it's needed.

This year's Family Day looks like being, potentially, the best yet. Saturday the 25th of June is the day to note in your diary when we get together at Coram Fields in London. You should have all received a pack of information about the day including a reply form asking if you would like to attend. Please, please, please, can you let us know if you want to come along? Even drop us a line if you can't come. It is very important to know numbers in advance as the cost of the day to the group is quite high which is why we are asking for a £10 contribution towards the costs. Contact details for the Family Day are later on in this issue.

The Family Day this year follows a Professionals Day at The Institute of Child Health. This day, hosted by Professor Neville and his team is to raise awareness of Worster-Drought and Perisylvian Syndromes within the medical community. It is hoped that a wealth of information will come out of this day which we can pass on to our membership base. We are also planning a presentation to give on the Professionals Day highlighting our group and what our aims are. Jonathon Lauder and myself are going to stand up in front of the assembled medics and tell them about our group. The intention is to let them know we exist and they can then suggest us to families who have come across WDS for the first time. I think we have all been there at some point. The next issue of Words will tell you all about the two days and, if you can't make the Family Day, let you know all the nitty gritty.

There has been a lot of debate over the past few months about what the future holds for our children. We know that some will grow into mature and self-supporting adults whilst the rest may need some kind of emotional and educational support for the foreseeable future. While I fully understand our need as parents to let our children develop and "fit in" as much as possible I also understand that, take our Christopher for instance, it is extremely unlikely that he will ever lead a truly independent adult life. The singularly most important fact about our children is that they are all different. Which is why it is so difficult to diagnose WDS and why we are pushing so hard for recognition in the medical world.

I hope that all of you who can make the Family Day do have a fun and fulfilling day and I can tell you that we have tried to book some decent weather.

Take care and I'll see you soon.
Gavin Leech.

This is Mark's Story,

My name is Mark I am 32 years old I was diagnosed with having WDS when I was 3 years old at Great Ormond Street. My early years were trying for my parents, not knowing what was wrong with me they felt they were fighting a losing battle.

Both my local GP and health visitor didn't have a clue why I couldn't talk, and dribbled like no tomorrow. I remember statements like "he doing it on purpose" I was always frightened as a child as I was different to other children but didn't know just how I could change that. I would always try and fit in with other children from an early age. Some how I kept getting isolated.

My early memories were of nursery and having to do knitting. Yeah knitting! Don't quite know what that was all about? But I was having great tempers because I couldn't do it and I wanted to be able to, but I couldn't get my hands to do what they wanted, no matter how much I tried. I was not able to tell someone that I didn't like it and wanted to do something else they just wouldn't listen. This continued for a number of years before I learnt to control my temper and use it to help me rather than against me.

I started mainstream primary school at the age of 5 and that was one of the most nervous days I had in my life. I think well definitely at that age anyway. I quickly formed a bond with another kid there who had CP we became best friends for a number of years before I lost contact when we moved house. Not being able to communicate that well, most of the teachers in my primary school just made me sit in the library and read books, only problem there is I never learn to read so found myself getting very lonely and ran away from school a number of times.

I think at the time it was more to get attention rather than I didn't like it. Also to see how far I could get away from home before getting caught! Oh just encase your wondering I never did get away from home. Well at the age of 6 both my parents had enough by this point I was having massive tempers at home so my they started a long battle with the LEA to get some special schooling for me.

After a 2-year battle they found me a school, which at the age of 8 I went to visit a few times before hand to see what it was like. It was a residential school that meant I would have to sleep there.

When I was first told about it I wasn't sure but soon after visiting the school I became part of the family there. It was like having a new home and life where people accepted me for who I was rather than what I couldn't do.

My carer was a very nice Nun called Sister Anne I owe a lot of my thanks to her, for who and what I have become now. She gave me the biggest kick up the backside I have ever had in my life, the shocking thing was even at the time I know it was me that had to improve things. I spend 3 years under the care of Sister Anne before moving to a new residential block.

In this time I became more confident about things and being able to start a new way of life I went to learn more about how to interact with other people and better forms of communication for me. Learning so much about getting about and how to control my dribbling which by now I have managed to control pretty well.

I was able to spend most my time learning speech and language I had 2 sessions a week for an hour each time. Looking back on it now not really sure if it helped me or not, being able to control my temper which sometimes could get really bad.

It was the only time I feel so out of control and the frustration of not being able to do what the speech and language teacher asked me to do was driving me mad. I then started to use sign language a lot that I found to be very useful. At the time I didn't know if it was Makaton or not, most the signs I made up myself and then use the basic alphabet to aid my own speech this was proving to be more positive for me.

Now at the age of 11 I had to start thinking about what I was going to do as a career. Always being fascinated with electronics I wanted to do something along those lines. I did really well in computers, I found they gave me a new way to interact with other people. Plus having note pad on most computers I was able to use this to type to people what I wanted to say. My spelling often let me down but as the years when on this began to improve. Not getting any GCSE's A to C grades at school

I then went on to college where I studied for a Btec course in Telecommunications and electronics. This proved to be a good move for me as on the college open day a family friend came to the college to see what I was doing on the course, as they knew there was vacancy at the company they worked at. They seem to be really impressed and after attending an interview I started working in the field of satellite communications. I was with that company for 8 years. My WDS nearly became a problem a few times regarding communication, as people didn't think I was all too clever. As I got older it never has become a shock to me how narrow minded some people can be. I was stopped going onto many contracts, as the company didn't feel that I would be setting the right impression for them.

It wasn't until much later in my time working for the company that I had a new manager who saw this and took action. It was only then I realised how much I could do myself given the chance. He gave me my biggest break I ever had working on the British Airways contract.

From what I have learnt now, the company never expected the contract to do that well but both my manager and myself knew that the contract had great potential. So after making me contract manager for Heathrow site where I managed over 10,000 locations including setting up the network at the new waterside building the contract was attracting management attention. In the first year we made so much money the contract was sold for a nice little profit, leaving me unfortunately redundant. Being I worked there for 8
